

Are therapeutic or in-house antibodies, or patents in the database?

Last Modified on 17/03/2023 9:47 am EDT

We have some, but our current focus for Selector is commercially available antibodies

To help you find antibodies that are ready to be used, we focus on providing actionable data on antibodies that are commercially available. With that said, we've developed technology to detect antibody-centric experiments that may not cite a catalog ID, which includes in-house and other custom antibodies. We recognize these data are still valuable and would encourage you to refer to the original papers and/or reach out to the authors for extra information.

You may find, however, that we have some commercially available therapeutic antibodies in our database. We are working toward analyzing patents for reagents and model systems, but they present some unique challenges from a data perspective that are working to overcome.